Central of the Future.

---The Editors.
Dedication

To the memory of a life spent in service and unselfish devotion to others——

To the memory of a radiant, beautiful Soul, which has passed into the Great Deep from whence it came——

To the memory of Miss Adelia Kiewit——

We humbly dedicate this Annual.
Dusk, coming swiftly, quenches out the Light.
So Death, as surely, ever threatens Life.
In regions far and cavern abysmal,
A fateful spinner plies our destinies.
Weary of our little vagaries,
She can but snip the thread that binds us
To the breath of Being and we pass
From glorious heights of life to the Unknown.

For her no solemn pomp of organ tones;
For her no high mass’ splendid litanies,
Nor heavy breath of incense, censer-swing;
But this---
The acknowledgment of all she did of good,
Of the understanding heart that now is still,
Of the candid soul that knew no road but one,
Of the self-forgetfulness in face of others’ ill.
Unconscious guide was she of future paths,
Embodiment of all we strive to be.
She carried on our spirit in the past;
Her memory carries it eternally.

In remembrance of a life so humbly great,
We offer this.

The Story of Old Central
Central of the Past
By ELIZABETH PATTON, '21

GREAT SCHOOL! A glorious record! One of Omaha's most famous landmarks! For almost half a century I've watched it develop and I'm proud of it. I tell you I'm proud of it."

The speaker, of distinguished and prosperous mien, turned toward his companions. They were standing, a group of four or five men and women of varying ages, at the foot of the long-sloping, shaded avenue, looking toward its summit crowned with a massive, granite structure, imposing and commanding, and now radiant in the noon-day sun.

"Ah, I was in the first graduating class—1876." The little woman with silvery hair smiled shyly as she spoke.

"Hm-mm! I came along in the nineties. My boy's up here now. I can claim a double interest." The alert business man spoke eagerly, and quickly the response came.

"We were here about the same time, were we not? Do you remember......?" And the gates of reminiscence were wide opened.

"When I went to high school," the tale began,"I recollect how the sticky, black mud—there were few pavements and no sidewalks in those days—made it almost impossible for us to get to school on time. Scarcely anyone arrived promptly. That was about '86, the year we started the Register. It was a four page, bi-weekly issued every other Thursday at the rate of fifty cents a year."

"But the next year," chimed in another voice, "it was enlarged and made a monthly. It was three or four years later when the first illustration appeared. I remember it perfectly—an original cartoon. The Annual—--."

"They had no Annual in my day."

"No, the first issue actually called an Annual appeared in '98, and it was my class, that of 1904, that instituted the custom of printing photographs and write-ups.

It was about that time, too, that the Register Stock Company was formed. That paper, you know, has had quite a history. Originaly it was privately owned, then came the Stock Company, and now it is under the control of the school."

"Another history of note is that of the military organization." It was the distinguished gentleman speaking again. "At first, we met once a week, the avowed purpose being, spring amusement. For a couple of years, '84 and '85, if you can conceive of this, all interest died out and we disbanded. The next year, however, guns were loaned us by the Grand Army, and the south end of the fourth floor was turned into an armory. We also had uniforms, that is, caps and belts. A second company was formed, consisting of thirty-two men and five officers. By '87 we had grown so numerous that it was deemed necessary to put some members out. They were ejected by ballot."

This statement was greeted by evident surprise.

"Why!"

"Really?"
The speaker continued, "And as for athletics—the youngsters of to-day have no advantage over us. Cricket used to be our favorite sport. Nothing can be more exciting than the opposition of a well-matched cricket team. Bowling, also, was in high favor. And chess and checkers! Ah, I was the champion checker player of old Central. It was in '87 we had our first football team."

"Please tell me," said the youngest of the group, "when our school was founded. Surely there must be some data about the institution itself, as well as its organizations."

"Yes, there is a great deal. Let me see...."

"Wasn't there a high school department in the grade school on Ninth Street, about 1858? I have heard it mentioned."

"Yes, and about that time Mr. Howard Kennedy established our present school system. Later, the high school occupied, at various times, the basements of the Congregational and Baptist churches, the Hamilton house, and a church building on Fifteenth street.

"In 1869 the ground known as 'old Capitol hill,' on which had stood the capitol of the territory of Nebraska, was transferred by the state legislature to the city of Omaha for educational purposes. Thus, on one of the finest sites in the country, was erected the first Omaha high school. The building, famous for its tall, brick tower, was finished in '72, at a cost of a quarter of a million. It is to Mr. S. D. Beals that credit and gratitude are due for the accomplishment of this worthy and exacting task."

"Later, as you all know, a much larger structure was made necessary. The first wing was completed in 1901, and the entire building in 1912. It cost about $750,000."

"After its completion the Commercial High School, which had formerly been connected with Central, was moved to a separate location. Now the building is more than filled with about 2500 students. The school started with about forty. The original plan of study was a six year course, admitting to the second year in college. In those beginning days, science was taught in a tiny, little closet of a laboratory, scarcely large enough for one person. The professor performed the experiments while the class looked on. Mathematics, ancient and American history were taught. Great stress was laid on rhetoric. A knowledge of literature was acquired by the programs of recitations given very frequently under the supervision of the teachers. Of course, we bought all our own books. They were expensive, too. At the end of the term we had a grand auction sale, and handed them down to the next comers."

"John H. Kellom was our first principal. Originally, he was an instructor in every subject. Not a pupil but adored him."

"During all these years," came the reply, "many notable men and women have joined in making an institution of great renown. It was Mr. Homer Lewis, principal from 1893 to 1896, who by his own fine qualities as a man, and by bringing from all sections exceptional teachers, first set the high standards we know so well today."

There was a thoughtful silence broken by the little lady who had graduated in '76.

"Speaking of the old building, surely you all remember the old walnut staircase? I recall that more vividly than anything in all my schooldays. How the boys used to slide down the steep, curving bannisters, four flights at once! And, oh, do you know the story of the dummy? The boys contrived a dummy figure of a man. Attached to a rope, this was dropped down the opening of the staircase. How we girls shrieked as it hurtled past and fell with a sickening thud on the floor below. I can recall the horror of it yet. But there was another story when the culprits were discovered. And the parties we used to have! Why, at one time the faculty entertained for the senior class. Every time we had a dance in the building the nails in the floor had to be pounded down and the floor soaped. Oh, the poor freshmen that trod that floor all unwittingly the next day!"

"The memory of Central High which I have carried away with me, and which impressed me more than any other, is its wonderful view. From the windows, especially of the east side, one beholds a panorama unsurpassed, scarcely rivaled. The broad sweeping expanse of the river there glimpsed has remained fixed in my mind's eye all these years. I shall never forget it."
"There was once a Boosters' Club at Central," remarked the distinguished gentleman. "I think we certainly could have qualified for membership."

"But," was the reply, "isn't it worth talking about? We all enjoy it so. And we are not half through yet. Think of how the cafeteria was started by the W. C. T. U."

"And how the students raised funds for a statue of Lincoln!"

"And the girls' regiment!"

"And the girl sponsors for the boys' regiments!"

"Pageants are no innovation at Central, either. In 1910, a pageant entitled America was presented by the history department, and at the Shakespeare tercentenary our school joined in a celebration with the three other high schools."

"It was in '85 that the manual training department was formed."

"And in 1902 the band was organized."

"The library, now so indispensable, is only six years old. It started, you know, in one of the small rooms on the first floor, with only three tables and no chairs. Soon it was moved upstairs, where now, its walls lined with seven thousand volumes, it accommodates about eighty pupils every study hour."

"Before the time of senior plays, the graduating classes had 'Fairs,' with such attractions as fortune tellers and pantomimes. Then in 1911 was given the first senior play. The Road Show was originally presented by the Athletic Board. Seven years ago it was taken over by the C. O. C."

"There are so many items of interest when we only stop to recall them," said the business man, "but isn't it, after all, the lives and characters of the men and women who have gone out from old Central—our friends and former classmates—that we remember most clearly? And they have been made and molded by the influence of their teachers, to whom we owe all honor. Take, for example, Miss Kate McHugh. Here was a conspicuous achievement. Her long years of service were culminated by three years as principal, during the time the present building was completed. Through her efforts the heating and ventilating plant was removed from the space in the center of the four wings to an annex on the west of the building. The ground thus left vacant was converted into a courtyard. Her remarkable executive ability, her charming personality, and gift of expression, coupled with her wisdom and interest in human nature, made her influence welcome and treasured wherever it was felt. And to her the school owes far more than is realized."

"That the spirit of service has been well inculcated in the students is symbolized by our service-flag, commemorating over seven hundred students and alumni, and with twenty-five gold stars," added another.
The group was silent for a moment, gazing at the building of gray stone, which seemed to them so real, so living. At length some one spoke.

"Is it not a privilege, a wonderful privilege, to be numbered among the five thousand, five hundred and eighty seven graduates who have gone forth from this school on the hill?"

The little body of men and women earnestly agreed that it was.

But another had come upon them in their reminiscences. He, too, was gazing at the building, proudly and with a smile on his lips.

"It is something to admire, and inspire one, isn't it?" he remarked. "Pardon me, but you are alumni of Central High?"

The distinguished gentleman laughed wholeheartedly, and answered for the smiling group. The boy went on:

"It must be great to look back to days spent in high school. I'm a student at Central now, a senior of the class of '21!"

The eyes of the listeners were smiling yet with a sort of wistful, far-away look. This was Youth speaking: Youth with its hope and gladness and unconquerable optimism! They too, had been young—and memories are at once a joy and a sadness.

"I say, folks," the student suddenly exclaimed, "I know you love the old school. You are intensely interested in its students. Would you care to have a copy of our Annual of 1921?"

Quick were the replies, and joyous. And as each of them received an Annual—the proof in black and white of the loyal work and high ideals of the senior class and of the underclassmen, with their aspirations for the coming years—we leave them to judge—as we leave you to judge—whether the students of Central High are upholding her noble traditions, her high ideals, her honor as a great and progressive school.

THE elegantly furnished parlor of Madame X were seated the Central High School class of 1970. The celebrated medium had promised them a treat out of the ordinary, and the class was all expectancy. From the adjoining room, shut off by long flowing curtains, came weird and uncanny sounds.

As the medium stepped out, all whispering stopped, and her audience sat waiting expectantly. She was a bit pale. In her hand she held a smooth crystal ball which she turned slowly round and round, looking at it and about the room, as if expecting something to appear either within the glassy depth of the ball or out of one of the walls of the room.

Suddenly she paused. "My friends," she began, "I promised you something novel, and I am not going to disappoint you. There are now gathering within this crystal ball the spirits of those who composed the class of Central High of 1921, the class that was able to put anything through, to whom nothing was impossible!"

She ceased and seemed to strain intensely in order to catch sight of something beyond the power of human ken.

"Ah!" she began, "Human forms are crowding into my crystal. But I cannot recognize any of them yet."

"Now I see," went on the medium, after a slight pause, during which could be heard words of admiration from the class. "Now I see a young boy. I see," she went on, "the form of Sam Samuelson, who was a 5-A student, for four successive school years. He is not alone. Jeanette Stout, also noted for her scholarship, has joined him in the depths of my crystal globe."

"I see," she was saying, "a great commotion. Purple and White is everywhere. Ah! It must be Purple and White Week. How hard one group is working. The class of '21 as usual! Come forth from the mysterious realms of the invisible, workers for the Purple and White, that these boys and girls may profit from beholding you, and may know what it is to be loyal and devoted to a cause."

After the spirits addressed had made themselves visible and then disappeared, the medium continued.

"Now I see a stage. A pageant is being given. Indeed it is the famous History Pageant of 1921, of which the boys and girls of today often talk. An unusual number in this class possessed literary and dramatic ability. I call the spirits of J. M. Watt, of Elizabeth Patton, of Carmelita Gorman, of Maurine Richardson, the chief authors; and of Isabel Evans and Mary Drake, the Pilgrim's Spirit and Columbia. Now within the depths of my crystal another event is appearing. It is the Road Show, as you have perhaps guessed."

At the mention of the famed Road Show of 1921, the class could contain themselves no longer. They all began speaking at once, begging the medium to prevail on the spirits to re-enact the show for their benefit. Alas, that is not the way of spirits! But such presences as Ham and Edgerly and some of the others appeared, and the class marvelled.

After allowing the furore to quiet down, the medium went on, "I now behold two of the leaders of the class, George Benolken and Crawford Follmer. With them are the artists of the class, for here are Regina McAnany and Russell Countryman. Sara Smeaton, too, is here, the most popular girl of the class. During all her school days she never had an enemy. Her kind, gentle ways won the hearts of everyone. I am sorry I cannot prevail upon them to make themselves visible so that you may see them. But my spirits are fading away! Only Scofield DeLong, the president of the class, remains, and his features are beginning to be blurred. Now all have vanished. But I see the old building as it was in the days of '21. The same old building and grounds. Not very attractive are the grounds, for grading was then going on. Now all is dark." And smiling wistfully, she rose to her feet, as the class turned slowly out into the street, each impressed with the solemnity of the occasion and inspired with the determination to be like the class of 1921.

The Class of Nineteen-Twenty-Two

The class of '22 has lived and will live up to the high standard of Omaha Central High School. In the year 1919-1920 (our sophomore year) the first Purple and White Week was celebrated, and, although the score was close, we won the honors from the freshmen. Several of our members distinguished themselves by winning positions on the football, basketball, track, baseball, and debate teams.

Now we are in the junior year. Although the seniors defeated us in the last Purple and White contest, we have not let them get far ahead of us in other lines. First of all, Mildred Cohn is the 5 A student of our class. Then, we are well represented in the various school activities by the following members of our class: in football by Wilmer Beerkle, Galloway, Lysle Hoerner, and Harold Stribling; in basketball by Wilmer Beerkle and Robert Keyt; in track by Wilmer Beerkle, Edwin Fry, Robert Keyt, and Frank Maritas; in baseball by Oliver Sauter, William Stalmaster, Phil Redgwick, and Harold Stribling; and in swimming by D. L. Dimond, and Ed. Thoman.

From the preceding account it will seem that the class has been active in all branches of school work. The class spirit is of the best, and has laid a firm foundation for greater school spirit. Next year, when we are seniors, we will need all of this spirit, and more, to accomplish as much as the outgoing class accomplished; and, although they have done much, we will try to do still greater things for Omaha Central High School.

The Class of Nineteen-Twenty-Three

The Register 1921

The Class of 1923 has now reached the half-way mark of its high school career. As we sophomores look back upon our first two years, we find that we have made a fairly creditable showing in our school work and activities. During our first year, the motto of the rest of the school seemed to be, "Take the fresh out of freshman," and so this year we've done our best to do unto the freshman as was done unto us.

We have cause to be proud of two members of our class, for their splendid football record. They are Beryl Meston, captain-elect for next fall, and Bill Clarke, one of the team's mainstays. Although these men represented our class on the field, the whole class backed them up from the grandstand—an essential part, if we expect the team to win.

A part of the success of the debating team of the school was due to Morris Block and Lyle Quinby, sophomores. This team has won eight victories in as many debates. In the Inter-Class Debates the sophomores beat the freshmen, juniors, and seniors on both sides of the inter-class questions, thereby winning the school championship.

The sophomores took the lion's share whenever A's were passed out. In fact, Jack Ringwalt took a little more than his share when he made fourteen points in one year, and these all A's. Others of the class took four or five of the coveted marks, which is indeed a great honor for the class.

In the Road Show, Kenneth Seeley and George McBride, by their singing and playing, brought honor to themselves and the class of '23. Kenneth Seeley took the leading part in the Glee Club act, while George McBride and his companions made the "Razzle Dazzle" act a success. We were also well represented in the orchestra.

During Purple and White Week, we gave the freshmen a run for their money and lost only by a narrow margin. The Week was a great success from every viewpoint—and it promoted class spirit and courtesy.

Next year we plan to take a still greater part in school activities; and when a year from now, the class of 1922 graduates, we want them to feel that they are safe in leaving to us the duties of a senior class.——ELMER THOMAS '23.
WE ARE the freshmen! Now you smile, but don't you remember when you were a little "freshie"? You were frightened to death for fear that you would go up the girls' stairs or get into the wrong room, or have somebody give you a "required physical examination." My, but you felt insignificant, didn't you? Well a lot of us felt that way too. But, now, we are almost sophomores. If we can make as good a name for ourselves next year as the class of '23 has this year we shall be satisfied.

We have made a fair start, however, as our long list of honor pupils shows. We certainly proved our caliber during Purple and White Week, when we won honors in Dramatics, Chorus, Decorations, Boys' Basketball, History Contest, Latin Contest, English projects, Household Arts Projects, and Natural Science. We hope we can do even better next year.

Hugh Smith, Charlotte McDonald, Melba Burke, Porter Forcade, and Margarette Rix have proven themselves worthy of being the honored officers of such a fine class. When it comes to athletics and debate, we are by no means ashamed of our record.

We have tried to live up to the rules and traditions of Central High, and we intend to keep on trying until we are dignified seniors.

FRANCES JOHNSTON.

WELL FOR-

TOWNE
E THINK of Omaha Central High School as a place, but it is far more than a place in the usual meaning of that word. It is a place rich in tradition, atmosphere, associations, achievements. Its very name and meaning has been hallowed by the men and women who have tarried four years within its walls and who have grown and developed while here, but who have in their going given back to the institution its bent, purpose, and meaning. For nearly half a century it has been a half-way house where young people might come in and gather strength, wisdom, insight, and decision for life's struggles. But these years have always been years of delight and pleasantness as each class and each group wrought better and more fully than those who have gone before. Each year sees standards raised a little higher and outposts extended a little beyond the old boundary line.

Omaha Central High School may well be proud of her sons and daughters. Some are continuing still within her gates, that the torch of learning may be borne to the on-coming numbers; many are in the great city, moulding and creating new destinies for that city; others have gone "beyond the line" and are making the world better for their work there. Our high school calls us, then, to that high idealism and splendid achievement which has already been accomplished. Shall we not pledge anew to-day our allegiance and loyalty to the finest and best that has been wrought among us?

J. G. Masters.
The Regiment

THE REGIMENT for the year 1920-21 has been a decided success. With no interruptions the work of training has gone on in excellent style. The six companies of infantry and the band are all larger than usual; and the attitude of the men toward drill, and the discipline which goes with it, is extremely gratifying. The entire year has been marked by an absence of disorder which is due partly to the quality of the men and partly to the quality of the officers. As each individual man realizes the duties of his position, the whole regiment progresses, and this year we have made good progress in practically all lines. Inspections which have been held, so far this year, have shown an increased interest in drill and a pride in the regiment which has at times before been lacking. The advertising campaign demonstrated competition between companies as well as the enthusiasm, and working ability of the men.

The commissioned officers have worked together in perfect harmony. Each officer has risen well to the dignity of his office, and each has done his best toward the success of the whole. Tact and judgment have been shown, and leadership of the most worthy quality.

The non-coms have yet to be put to the final test, but all indications point to a good crop of officers for next year. The results of the first non-com test were not so good as expected in certain cases, but there are strong evidences of a greater preparation for the second test, and it is confidently expected that this examination will show better results.

Last but not least we come to the man who is largely responsible for the success of the drill this year, the man who picked the officers last spring and who holds in hand the destinies of the present non-coms. Mr. Gulgard has worked unceasingly for the advancement of the regiment and is a true friend of the students. He has steadily and faithfully based his promotions on merit and character and has done his duty fairly. Mr. Frank Gulgard is truly the cornerstone of the Central High Cadet Regiment.

The difficult position of faculty manager has been successfully filled this year by Andrew Nelson, who has guided the Student Association through one of its most successful years. His interest in his work is the reason for his success.

Frank Bunnell, as student athletic manager, has filled one of the biggest and most difficult jobs in school in an efficient and satisfactory manner. He is the only manager who has ever won a letter and managed a team at the same time. We regret the loss of this hard worker and loyal school supporter. Albert Wolf carried out his duties as assistant manager very successfully, and we are glad that he will be with us next year.
R. HAROLD R. MULLIGAN (in every-day English, "Mully") has spent his last year as an active member of Central High school, and has given up his duties as head coach to take up work as a physician in the professional world. Mulligan is one of the most loved and admired men in school and his loss will be felt more than can be told.

"Mully" has accomplished one thing at Central for which his name will always live, namely clean sportsmanship. In his six years as coach, he has built a reputation throughout the whole Missouri Valley for putting teams in the field that are clean sports and real men. Every team that comes to Omaha knows that it will get a square deal with Mulligan. This reputation has permeated the whole school so that not only the athletic teams also but the whole student body is admired.

Mulligan came to Central from Lincoln as head coach and teacher six years ago. He taught English and coached the debating team and senior play besides taking charge of athletics, but he has had so many outside duties the last couple of years that he has had to give up everything but athletics.

The reputation that Mulligan has made as a coach is a brilliant one, for he has produced many championship teams which have shown signs of real coaching. In 1916 and 1917 Central turned out football teams that took the Missouri Valley championship with comparative ease. They never lost a game in this time.

The basketball teams of 1917 and 1918 were runners up in the state tournament. "Mully's" basketball quintets have always gone to the semi-finals in the tournament with the one exception of this year's team, but the brilliant record made by this team otherwise helped to counteract this failure at Lincoln.

Mulligan's track teams have always been the comment of the state. Central has pulled first place twice in the state meet in the last six years and first place in one Missouri Valley meet. The track squad has also won two second places during this time, due more to "Mully's" work than to anything else.

As you leave us, Mully, our best wishes go with you for even greater success than you attained at Central. Good Luck!

FRANK BUNNELL, '21.
THE FOOTBALL TEAM
A Review of the Football Season

WHILE the 1920 football season was not the most brilliant one in the history of Central High, it was not one to be ashamed of, for there were several distinguishing features which made the season a success.

To begin with, the team won only three out of nine games. But the grid men scored 142 points to their opponents' 124, which shows their superiority to their average opponent.

At the beginning of the season, prospects were not very bright. Coach Mulligan had only five experienced men on which to build a team. However, he picked a team composed mostly of new men, who by the end of the season displayed real ability.

The first game of the season was with the Packers from South High. Mulligan's crew lost by the score of 7 to 0, a touchdown being scored in the last minute of play. This did not discourage the boys, for they went to Council Bluffs the next week, and played a real game, winning 38 to 0.

The third game on the schedule was with the Bookkeepers at Commerce. This game was looked forward to as one of great importance because of the rivalry between the two schools, Commerce proved too much for the Purple and White aggregation, who lost by a score of 26 to 3. Captain Campbell saved a shutout by scoring a neat drop kick.

The next game was with Sioux City High. They invaded Omaha with a classy outfit of football players, and walked home with a 13 to 7 victory. Clement made the touchdown for Central. The team came close to scoring several times, but could not put the ball over.

Central's next mix was a battle against the warriors from North Des Moines. They too got the long end of the bacon, winning 21 to 7. Clement was responsible for Central's score in this game.

The team journeyed to Beatrice for the next game and met a team of championship caliber. The boys from Mulligan's home town had a real team and walked off with a 31 to 0 score.

Next came Lincoln, Central's old rival. The Purple and White eleven went to Lincoln determined to square several defeats. While they did not win, they gave a very good account of themselves. Lincoln won 19 to 6. Captain Campbell was the star of the game, making two dropkicks for six points. Two hundred rooters accompanied the team on this trip.

The remainder of the season was a path of roses. Central walloped Norfolk 48 to 0, and St. Joseph 33 to 7. The Norfolk game was a sight for sore eyes. Mulligan's team worked like a well-oiled, seasoned team. They scored six touchdowns during the game. Meston was responsible for two as was Clement. Smith made one, and Hoerner broke into the limelight by scoring one on a fluke play.

The annual Turkey Day game with St. Joseph was a fitting ending for the season. The Centralites showed everything they had in this game, and completely dazzled the boys from Missouri. The first touchdown was made without a signal by Meston immediately after the game had started. The scoring was carried on, and 33 points piled up before the Purple and White warriors let down the curtain on the 1920 season.

The team was characterized by an unconquerable fighting spirit, which, accompanied by hard work and a desire to do their best, finally brought victory to the Central grid men. Coach Mulligan cannot receive too much praise for the great work he did in making a team of raw recruits. It was his last football output at Central, and the school feels that it was one of the most successful. The team forever carried on the Central standard of clean sportsmanship and fair play, which has always characterized the "school on the hill."
THE BASKETBALL TEAM
The Basketball Season

The Central High School basketball team enjoyed a more successful season than did any other athletic team at school this year. Coach Mulligan's basket-tossers registered eleven victories and two defeats before going to the tournament.

At the beginning of the season Coach Mulligan was faced with the same problem as that which confronted him in football, a large turnout of green men. Captain Clement was the only veteran, and around him the whole team was to be built.

Fortune smiled favorably on us at the beginning of the season when Sid Corenman made his appearance in a basketball uniform and immediately proceeded to show Mully that he knew something about the great floor-game.

Mully whipped the team into such shape that it opened the season by trouncing the South High Packers in their "band box" by a score of 38-26. Although the next game was lost to Council Bluffs 19-17, the team then struck its stride and won three consecutive games by defeating Sioux City, Fremont, and Council Bluffs. We then traveled south to St. Joseph and let the Jo-Jo's beat us 32-20. But that was the third game in one week and is somewhat excusable.

Lincoln, our ancient rival, was the next on the program. Their team came up here and beat us in a listless game, 13-11. South High was then taken on for another drubbing, 24-19.

Then came one of the most important games on our schedule, and one in which the team played their hardest. The Creightonites went down before our attack by a score 20-12. Great was the rejoicing in the Purple and White camp.

The team then made a successful two-day trip into Iowa, defeating Sioux City for the second time 24-14 and Fort Dodge 26-13. Next came Benson High, who took a 34-20 beating very gracefully.

Our next game with Commerce was a real disappointment. The team tried hard to beat the Bookkeepers but their well-balanced machine was too much, and we submitted to a defeat of 31-13.

We then went to Beatrice and lost an exciting game by the close score of 25-24.

Our next game was one of the events that made the season a real success. We traveled to Lincoln and met the haughty "Links" on their home floor. They waxed furious, and when the smoke had cleared away, the Purple and White was on top by an 18-17 score. What a "grand and glorious feeling!" Our last game with Fort Dodge we won easily by a score of 26-12.

And then came the tournament, that most hated and dreaded ordeal in a basketball team's history. We braved the event in a resolute manner and took the count of Hastings, a worthy opponent from out state, by a 17-19 score in the first round.

Our next team was a bunch of men from Kimball County. We put up a good fight, but lost by one point, 15-16. And then and there, our basketball season ended. We didn't get so far in the tournament as we usually do, but the season was a success nevertheless.

As for the personnel of the team, Captain Clement played throughout with his characteristic brilliancy. He led the team in a very successful manner and is to be congratulated for his good influence.

Captain-elect Beerkle did not make the first few games, but made up for the lost time when he did get in. He will be a good leader next year.

Sid Corenman was the star of the team. He played a wonderful game as a running guard, shooting with astounding accuracy and guarding in good fashion.

Lloyd Good, the team comedian, played a fine game as a standing guard. His guarding was almost uncanny at times, for he seldom failed to get that ball, regardless of opposition.

Keyt and Bunnell, the other two men to receive letters, played at forward and center. They both did good work, and filled in nicely. Keyt was used more regularly, while Bunnell played a substitute's role part of the time.

Inter-Class Champions

The basketball team of the class of '22 won the Inter-class championship this year. It was a hard fight, but finally the juniors won over the freshmen in the final contest. In the first game of the season the juniors beat the seniors in a hard-fought battle. The game was undecided until the final whistle blew. Sauter and Ravitz starred for the winners, while Reynolds and Mallory played best for the losers. Next the juniors bumped up against the freshmen and lost. The beginners won in fine style. The shooting of Percival and the guarding of Howell were excellent. The juniors had their "off" night and were unable to overcome the early lead of the lower classmen. The sophomores were easy for their upper classmen. Gilbert Reynolds and Gene Holmes played a good game for the losers, while Ravitz and Johnston shone among the juniors. On the same evening the seniors surprised the freshmen and beat them, making the juniors and freshmen tied for the honors. The freshmen had a strong team for the runners-up. The juniors had practically the same team as they had last year, when they won the championship. After a season of hard work, the team, piloted by George Johnston and coached by Mr. Fred Hill, won the championship again.
What did you see the “Scrubs” do this season? Although they played about three or four games, that was not how they played their part. Their work, or rather labor, was performed in the old north gym of Central High. Every night after school from three or four o’clock until any time, they slaved, trying to lick the first squad and show the coach they could do something. Any one of them could be taken and worked with the regulars and could do his part well. They were at every game with suits on, backing the regulars. They gave their time by cooperating and helping to make a first class team fit to represent Central High on the hardwood floor.

Captain Mallory, Reynolds, Hunter, Berg, and Benolken belong to the class of ’21. These five members from the second squad represented their class on the court.

The three remaining men who received “R”, Sauter, Johnston, and G. Reynolds, have one year left in which to represent old Central in the basketball world.

THE BASEBALL TEAM
FOR THE FIRST TIME in the history of old Central High School, we have a swimming aggregation. At the request of the school in November, E. A. Thoman, Jr., Scofield DeLong, John T. Robertson, and D. L. Dimond represented Central High School in the first State High School 200-yard relay championship swim ever staged in Nebraska.

These young men won the title, at the first meet of the season, in the "sea of O. A. C.," November 18, 1920, by making the remarkable time of one minute, fifty-nine seconds.

Following the relay, the boys placed in each of the other three class A events:
50 yard free style swim: Thoman, first; DeLong, second; Dimond, third.
100 yard championship swim: Dimond, first; Thoman, third.
50 yard backstroke swim: Thoman, first; Dimond, second; DeLong, third.

January 13 saw the tank artists entered in an open Nebraska State championship relay swim at the O. A. C. The team won second place, being defeated by the O. A. C. team, which was composed of fast men swimmers.
50 yard breaststroke championship swim: DeLong, first; Dimond, second.
200 yard free style swim: Dimond, second; Robertson, third.

In February, the team helped make the O. A. C. Grand Burlesque Aquatic Carnival a success.

Johnny Robertson, while playing cowboy and "injun" on a horse, fell off and broke his collar bone. Consequently Johnny has been thrown out of the race and has had to give up his swimming for a while, but now he is coming back with the same old pep.

Verner Shalbery is our latest find. He showed exceptionally well in the April meet, the last meet of the season, which was held April 21 under the auspices of the Western A. A. V. and was open for entries from ten states.
Senior Girls’ Basketball

THE senior basketball team held the championship during their last year. However, their other two chances to win this honor were lost but by a very narrow margin. This year, headed by their able captain, Eleanor Hamilton, they beat both the sophomores, and the juniors by large scores. During Purple and White Week they showed their true worth by winning for their class the entire number of girls’ basketball points. The senior line-up was as follows:

Irene Mangold ....... Left Forward
Helen Larson ......... Right Forward
Gladys Charmock .... Side Center
Eleanor Hamilton .... Center
Grace Gallagher ....... Right Guard
Rosalie Platner ....... Left Guard

WHEN the call came to buy Student Association tickets, the students responded to this with the good old Central spirit. There were a good many tickets sold, and this put the Association on a good, firm foundation. The games of the year were well attended and great credit is due to the men on the teams for the wonderful sportsmanship they displayed. The mass meetings were a big feature of the year that everyone looked forward to with eagerness. While they were full of pep and were most interesting, there was no misconduct or discourtesy whatever in the audience. Under the able management of Mr. Nelson, assisted by the officers, the Association has experienced a very successful year.

OPES FOR a successful debating season had fallen to a low ebb last fall. Every veteran debater had been graduated; the entire squad had to be selected from absolutely inexperienced men. Moreover, our excellent coach of last year, Miss Mary Hansen, was unable to continue her fine work this year. However, the new coach, Mr. Verne Chatelain, proved to be a man of quick action, and try-outs were promptly scheduled. Three girls spoke with surprising ease and power, in competition with thirty-four embryonic boy orators. All three girls were chosen! This was a startling innovation, unheard of in the annals of Central High School Debating. But the experiment has been gratifyingly successful. No three boys, collectively or individually, could have been a greater asset to the debating squad than Eleanor Hamilton, Ruth Godfrey, and Eloise Margaret. These girls have developed a style of oratory of which Central is very proud. The boys chosen were Morris Block, William Cejnar, Richard Elster, Karl Kharas, and Lyall Quinby.

From this group of eight potential debaters, excellent material, but totally inexperienced, Mr. Chatelain has produced a winning team of skillful forensic fighters. There have been no alternates. The positions in the line-up of a given debate have always been secured through hard competitive preparation among the members of the squad. Under this unique method of training, each member of the squad has been able to represent Central on the rostrum. In Mr. Chatelain we have a coach of sterling quality. He is redundant with ideas for the coming year, and we feel certain that with his coaching the success of the future Central High School debating is assured.

In spite of repeated delays and setbacks, eight championship battles were fought. The proposition debated throughout the season was the state question: "Resolved, That the literacy test for restricting immigration should be repealed." The first clash was with South High. Our affirmative team out-classed the Packers and sent them home with but one decision. How they secured that will always be a mystery. With this victory, however, the team gained much-needed confidence and the enthusiastic support of the school.

Our next venture was a dual debate with Commerce High. Study Hall 215 was packed to see the intellectual conflict between our boys and the Commerce boys' team. The opposition was a keen, well-balanced trio; but Central High displayed a method of attack in rebuttal that won a unanimous decision in favor of Central. Probably the first girls' inter-scholastic debate of any importance witnessed in the state was staged at the Commerce lunch room. The Central maidens stepped on the Commerce girls with a zip and tear that bespoke a revengeful spirit hungrier than anything the lunch room had ever seen. The decision was again 3 to 0 in our favor.

Our negative team then met and defeated the trio from Beatrice, to the tune of 2 to 1. A week later we sent our affirmative team to Beatrice and secured the same decision in a hard-fought contest. Beatrice, who won last year's state
The team is on ability, excellent champions, had developed a fine team, and this double victory gave Central considerable prominence among state teams.

The last debate of the season at Omaha was scheduled with Cathedral High School of Lincoln. Mr. Woolery, the chairman, aptly characterized the contest as "the battle of the giants." The Cathedral team presented a brilliant and spectacular style of oratory. They had been previously undefeated, and the contest was close. But Central fairly out-classed them on the platform. Cathedral completely succumbed to the rapid-fire rebuttal of our fighters. Once more the decision was unanimous for Central. At the close of the debate, the decisions of the season were three against Central and seventeen in her favor.

Still another competing team was eliminated from those eligible to the championship when our negative team defeated the University Place squad at University Place, gaining a third unanimous decision.

At Lincoln High School, fortune turned her face away from our team and Central suffered her first, last, and only defeat of the season. The courteous and versatile Lincoln debaters were keen and worthy to win—if any team is—from Central.

Lincoln now has two consecutive victories over Central. A third will secure the Amherst cup as Lincoln's permanent possession. Here's to the success of our next year's team!

Central has not forfeited all claim to the championship of the state by this defeat, however. Cathedral High School won the State High School Debating League Championship. In some mysterious way they had succeeded in defeating Lincoln High earlier in the season, thus eliminating them from the tournament, in which Central did not participate, as we did not join the Debating League this season. This situation gives Cathedral High, Lincoln High, and Central High equal claims to the state championship. And Central's general record for the season is better than that of either of the other two teams. We have debated eight first class teams, have won seven victories, and have secured nineteen decisions, losing but five.

This record is one of which Central may well be proud. The team is one of the best Central has ever had. This is due to exceptional ability, excellent coaching, and hard work.

The members of the team feel indebted to Mr. E. E. McMillan, whose encouragement and practical suggestions have been of great value in uplifting the morale and clarifying the judgment of the debaters. Thanks also are due to Miss Mary A. Parker, whose interest in the team has been shown in many pleasing ways.

May the debating teams of the future always hold high the irreproachable standards of Central High School!

MORRIS BLOCK.
The Season's "O" Debators

Colonel Eleanor Hamilton, one of the best constructive speakers in the debating history of Central High School. Cause of success: The weight in her arguments and the force in her presentation. Favorite Diversion: Digging ditches with a golf club.

Eloise Margaret, a whirlwind in rebuttal. Cause of Success: Ability to make opponents look and feel like a ten cent tip in the dining room of the Hotel Fontenelle. Favorite Diversion: Posing for portrait pictures and disposing of same in heart-rending fashion. Eloise will help to fight Central's forensic battles next year.

Ruth Godfrey, the girl who made the Scarlet of Commercial High turn pale yellow. Cause of Success: An oversupply of ZIP. Favorite Diversion: Raising Currants for the Student Club.

William Cejnara, the conservative member of the squad. In Cejnara Central loses a very capable man. Cause of Success: His delicate and soothing intonations. Favorite Diversion: Staging oratorical speeches in American History class.

Richard Elster, a true Bolshevik. Cause of Success: Not yet discovered. Favorite Diversion: Raising cain. Dick is a brainy man with great ability, although he has never attempted to display his power.

Morris Block, a phenomenal logician. Cause of Success: Ability to make opponents believe they are wrong. Favorite Diversion: Apparently none. Block will make excellent material for next year's debating squad.

Lyall Quinby, our infant prodigy. Cause of Success: Enormous lung power and a keen sense of humor. Favorite Diversion: Eating strawberry short cake a la mode at Burrough's Cafe, Lincoln. Nuf sed! Quinby is another good fellow for next year.

Karl Kharas, a struggling dauber among forensic artists. Difficulty of Success: Necessity of bluffing in his subjects. Favorite Diversion: Flirting with his teachers. Frequent failure in such attempts probably accounts for that down-hearted expression often seen on Kharas's modest features.

Inter-Class Debating

In May, 1920, Miss Mary Hansen, the debating coach of the year, put into effect an idea which has developed until to-day it has become an important factor in calling forth debaters for the school team, in creating interest in debating in general, and in making this activity one in which many students may participate.

Inter-class debating, which has accomplished all these results, is still in its infancy. Its possible growth and development is a matter of conjecture.

The inter-class debate question for 1920 was “Resolved that immigration to the United States should be further restricted.” After the various classes had held their try-outs and selected their teams, the first series of debates was held. In these the two sophomore teams beat the freshmen. The senior teams, both affirmative and negative, won from the juniors.

The freshmen and junior teams, although they lost their first debate, are to be commended, for their opponents won from them by a narrow margin.

The second and final series of debates between the seniors and sophomores was also a dual debate, the two teams meeting simultaneously. The members of the senior team were as follows: affirmative, Helen Gerin, Hazel Giles, Isaac Sternhill; negative, Warren Campbell, Elton Baker, James Lewis. The members of the sophomore team were affirmative; Louis Fellman: Fredrick Schwartz, Morris Block: negative, A. B. Finkelt, Edward Brodkey, Ben Kobby.

In the final debate the sophomores won the 1920 championship from the two senior teams by an unanimous decision.

This year the good work started by Miss Hansen was continued by the new debating coach, Mr. V. E. Chatelain, who was ably assisted by Frederick Schwartz, one of last year’s inter-class champions. After the various classes had picked out their teams, the first series of debates was held on Friday, May 13, 1921. This was an unlucky Friday for the freshmen, for the representation of the class of ’23 repeated the performance of last year’s sophomores. In the same series of debates both the senior and junior negative teams were unable to withstand the sound logic and forceful presentation of the upholders of the city manager plan, and went down in defeat.

In the final series the sophomores, in accordance with their usual custom, defeated both the junior affirmative and senior negative. Both the junior and senior teams equaled the sophomore team in constructive work, but when it came to rebuttal and presentation, the sophomores were superior to them. The losing senior team was composed of Isaac Sternhill, James Bradley, and Sam Samuelson. The representatives of the juniors were Fredrick Schwartz, William Stallmaster, and Richard Lovald. The sophomores who won the inter-class debate championship for 1921 were affirmative: Sam Minkin, Irving Changstrom and Milton Mandelsohn; negative: David Dotin, Phillip Handler, and Howard Elliott. The coach of the 1921 inter-class champions was Morris Block. Much credit is due to the alternates, Stanley Street and Worthington Williams, who by their good work created the needed competition.

On the whole, we may well be content with the splendid work that has been accomplished by inter-class debates in Central High School. We have made mistakes, to be sure but we have profited by them. With the additional experience and knowledge gained, we feel confident in saying that next year, with the help of the faculty and the newly organized inter-class debating society, the year of 1922 will mark a new epoch in debating for Central.

Morris Block ’23
CENTRAL has two branches of activities that heretofore have not been forcibly brought to public notice—the Music and the Dramatic departments. Mrs. Pitts and Miss Williams are recent additions to our faculty, but in a very short period they have shown their ability, experience, and initiative in bringing out the usually wasted or, at best, badly misused talent that a school of this size possesses.

Unusual success was attained by a combination of the Glee Clubs and Dramatic classes in a comic opera, “The Captain of Plymouth,” based on the poem, “The Courtship of Miles Standish,” by Longfellow; and while Alden’s lines clung in general to the original, certain parts were enlarged upon and interwoven in a humorous and ingenious fashion. The play gave a large number a chance to participate, as about one hundred and twenty-five took part. Strong choruses, melodious incidental solos and group work, striking finales, and dances, both dainty and unique, gave the players a chance to show their musical intelligence. Elaborate costumes and settings lent a professional air to the finished work of the students.

The main cast was chosen by try-out and was as follows:

- Miles Standish, Captain of Plymouth: Murrel Simpson
- John Alden: Lloyd Good
- Elder Brewster: Kenneth Seeley
- Erasmas, Man-at-arms: George Benolken
- Wattawamutt, Indian Chief: Howard Woerner
- Pricilla: Dorthy Steibugh
- Katonka: Josephine Drapier
- Mercy: Myra Hinman

Indians, squaws, sailors, maidens, Puritans, and a lively sextette of girls made up the ensemble.

The play was a success from every angle. It showed what we can do within our own student body; it made a favorable impression on the public; it helped establish a precedent for better entertainment, which the two departments are steadily achieving; and it turned out very well financially.

Credit should be given Miss Williams, dramatic coach; Mrs. Pitts, music coach and conductor; Norma Mack, dance instructor; the selected school orchestra, which played the complete score; Mr. Bexten and the stage hands; the ticket sellers, the poster painters, the ushers, and all others who so kindly lent their time and aid in helping to put the opera over in such fine style.

Murrel P. Simpson.
"Mr. Bob"

Mr. BOB," the class play of the mid-year Seniors, was presented in the High School Auditorium, January 27. Preceding the comedy, a pantomime entitled "Blue Beard" was given. The leading parts were taken by Lowell Miller as Blue Beard, and Ruth Quinlan as Fatima, Beatrice Sandahl as Fatima's mother, Elizabeth Adams as Fatima's sister, and Harry Ravitz and Edward Manger as Fatima's brothers. Ludwig Endres took the role of Blue Beard's servant, and Tina Alschuler, Elizabeth Johnson, Virginia Morcom, Esther Ruhnk, Violet Schneider, Evelyn Vogel, and Helen Spenser appeared as his former wives.

In "Mr. Bob," Ronald Gladstone took the part of Philip Roysen, a young college man. Lydia Flesher impersonated his cousin, while Katherine Rogers and Mina Sass played the role of Marion Bryant, her friend. The incidents brought about by the love of Katherine's aunt for black cats, soon grew into a well-developed plot in which all the characters mistook the true identity of people they addressed. The love affair on the side between the butler, acted by Leon Connell, and the maid, played by Helen Muir, added greatly to the mirth of the play. In the end everyone was properly introduced and the mistakes were explained. Helen Forslund took the part of the maiden aunt; Frank F. Fenner that of Robert Brown. The coach was Miss Lena May Williams.

"The Bewildering Miss Felicia"

THE BEWILDERING Miss Felicia" was the play given by the Student Club girls February 25 and 26.

The leading part was well taken by Frances McChesney. The others in the cast were Almeda Hamilton as Mrs. Hyppolytus Biddle, who pretended she was married, but whose husband was only a dummy; Zelda Westberg as Mrs. Douglas, honeymooning alone; Melva Gerard as Miss Oggsby, who kept boarders; Katie Goldstein as Miss Oggsby's drudge; Helen Turpin as Mrs. Murray, a widow; Thelma Burke as Norma, her daughter; Arvilla Johnson as Adeline Paisley, a very romantic girl; Gladys Kemp as Lucretia Long, rather inclined to be frivolous; and Arline Rosenbery as Mrs. Addison, whom the villagers avoided because they thought she was divorced. The parts of three village girls were taken by Muriel Andrews, Vilma Butt, and Dorothy Gordon. Anne Rosenblatt did exceptionally well in the part of a French madamoiselle, a maid to Felicia. Elinore Calvert played the part of an Irish lady, who sold butter and eggs, while the two colored parts were played by Lucile Morris as "Freedom," who had received her freedom papers, and Margaret McCandless as a laundress.

The scene was laid in 1830 in a little village called Lilac. The play portrayed the narrow-mindedness of the villagers and showed how all of their lives were changed by the coming of Miss Felicia.

The long, old fashioned dresses, and quaint poke bonnets made a very pretty picture on the stage.

During the course of the play there was much excitement and mystery over the stuffed dummy, the discovery of which brought to light Mrs. Biddle's long-kept secret.

The acting of the girls caused much favorable comment and the play was considered a great success.

—Helen Turpin.
Presentation of the allegorical pageant-drama, "Everygirl," introduced a new note into the annual Gymnasium exhibition staged May 10, by members of the Gym Club under the direction of Miss Platt and Miss Hutton. Circus tumbling and a "speedo lens" baseball game, given entirely in pantomime, were added features of the exhibit.

The first half of the program was devoted to regulation gymnastics—military, dumb bell, wand, and Indian-club drills, with the tumbling act and baseball demonstration supplying a touch of novelty, as well as indicating the muscular control and precision of execution which the girls gain in their class floor-work.

"Everygirl" or "The Golden Wish" was undoubtedly the feature of the program, and set a new standard for future exhibitions of this nature. The pageant presented the story of Everygirl's search for the greatest happiness in life. Accompanied by the Little Golden Wish, her constant companion, Everygirl goes into her garden to meditate, attended by the Three Graces. Two forces are contending for her favor, the one headed by Selfishness, the other by Service. Selfishness attempts to lure The Golden Wish with the help of Idleness, Flattery, The Follies and the Vanities, all of whom appear very attractive; while Service is aided by the nine Muses. Work, Sleep, and The Dreams, who present to Everygirl many Famous Women who lived for Service alone. Awakened from her reverie by the Piper and the Little Joys of Life, Everygirl sees Work transformed from Drudgery to Beauty, and is won over to the cause of Service.

A well-chosen cast of characters, excellent pantomime and dancing, and strikingly brilliant costumes, combined to make the portrayal of "Everygirl" most effective.

HE purpose of the History Pageant was to celebrate the Tercentenary landing of the Pilgrims. It was in every way, a project, conceived, created, and executed by the students. Committees were formed, foremost among which was the Literary Committee. The work done by this group was of so lofty a character, of so finished an execution and so indicative of talent that it won the commendation of faculty and student-body alike. We owe our thanks and appreciation to the cast which so ably interpreted the parts, and there should be especial mention of the dignified portrayals of the Goddess of Columbia by Mary Drake and of the admirable impersonation by Isabel Evans of the part of the Pilgrim Spirit. The Properties, Costumes, Stage Selling and Scenery Committees left no details to the imagination, for every thing was carried out with a care quite professional; while Mr. Bexten and his efficient helpers handled the practical end with their customary ability. What insured the Pageant’s unmistakable success was the enthusiastic backing of the whole school, whose hearty cooperation and sympathetic reception made itself most pleasantly felt.

The Pageant, we believe, has helped to freshen old images. It has brought us to a better understanding of the sacrifice of those who laid down the bulwarks of our nation, and who fought and suffered for the principles that still survive. It has assured us of the good will and support of the faculty and the student body. It has given to us the opportunity of facing requirements and meeting them splendidly.

The monetary proceeds of the Pilgrim Pageant have gone to the maintenance of the French War Orphans—a cause the Pilgrims would have championed.

The Senior Play

THE SENIOR Play, "Mary Jane's Pa," was the story of a capable American woman, Portia Perkins, who was left by her husband for a period of eleven years with two children to rear and educate. How she rose to the situation, educated her daughters, and successfully carried on a printing business was a matter of much concern to the audience. Mrs. Perkins used her paper as an instrument in a political strife in the hope of establishing good government in her state.

The scene of the play is laid in a small Indiana village, which furnishes rich local color. The characters of the village make a delightfully humorous background for the more serious plot of the re-establishment of this American home.

In the midst of this great political strife, Hiram, the derelict husband of Portia Perkins, appears, much to her discomfort. To all appearances he returns a tramp with no money nor any outlook for the future. Portia, for the sake of her children and their good names, refuses to turn him out, as he justly deserves, but offers him the position of cook in her household.

The situation created by such an unusual circumstance brings her into discredit with the people of the village. Hiram, watching the situation with keen interest, succeeds in winning the love of his young daughter, Mary Jane, who makes him realize that he is creating a wrong impression for a wife whom he has greatly wronged.

At the close of the second act he meets the situation with such wonderful poise and efficiency that he succeeds in assuring the success of Portia's fight for her candidate. After this he resolves to leave Gossport and the wife, whom he realizes he loves, in order that she may marry the man, Rome Preston, whose cause she has championed.

The third act brings to conclusion the re-establishment of this real American home. Portia realizing that she loved her husband all the time, and they take up the threads of life anew.

The atmosphere of the play was helped greatly by those taking part as villagers and guests at the party. The subplot of the play centered around the older daughter, Lucille Perkins, and a young actor, who at the time of the play was presenting a stock-company performance in the village of Gossport. Joe Skinner, the political antagonist of Rome Preston and a character of warped ideas of fairness, was admirably portrayed by Frank Bunnel. There were several of the cast who furnished the humorous background and called forth rounds of laughter from the audience: Star Skinner, fittingly played by Duff Sadler, was the youth of the village, too susceptible to maiden charms; the part of Amos Whipple, the campaign manager of Joel Skinner, was taken by Lloyd Wagner; Walter Metcalfe took the part of Link Watkins, a very warm member in his fur overcoat; Herbert Fisher as Claud Whitcomb did not permit the audience to forget that he was a provincial character from an American small town; Harry Haynes, as Llewlyn Green, made a not-to-be-forgotten "printers devil;" Ray Clement, as Eugene Merryfield brought out the real character of our average American boy who has a mother to support and because of this refuses to do a right thing which has the appearance of wrong for fear of not being able to meet his obligations. The characters, Miss Faxon, taken by Annette Fanger, and Ivy Wilcox, by Myra Hinman, so well portrayed the maliciousness of gossip that we all felt upon leaving that it is far better to think and speak only kind things of our neighbors. Barrett Sheridan, the young actor, was admirably played by Leon Connell, and his little sweetheart, Lucille Perkins, was very well presented by Helen Caldwell. Rome Preston, the politician standing for good government, was so nobly sustained by George Benolken that we were almost sorry he did not win his lady. Portia Perkins, the capable American... woman of whom we are all so proud, was portrayed in all of her difficult moods and reactions by Maud Poff. Little Miss Mary Jane, the little fairy who alone from the beginning of the play to the end sensed the strong tie of love, was the instrument who brought about the re-establishment of this home. This part was so well portrayed by Margaret Lew Sholes that we are not ashamed of the tears we shed in some of her scenes.

The difficult character of Hiram Perkins, a character of moods and ambitions, was taken by Carlton Evans, who left us some philosophy that is really worth our consideration. When he said to Rome Preston in the second act in making a comparison, "In my position my pre-requisite is the cheese parings, and the chicken wings; yours," (speaking of Rome Preston, the politician) "a block of stock and the lobbyist's small change. My associates are the grocer, the butcher, and the fisherman; yours, the lawyers, the politician and the corporations. Comparatively the fishman looms large. Don't you think so?" we could not help agreeing for the moment. Again we wondered if he were not giving us some splendid food for thought when in Act III he made the speech in which he said, "By all means, why shouldn't they? They are free-born Americans with a constitutional government and public schools; therefore when things are a little slow, naturally they feel that they must burn or drown or kill someone and oddly enough do it in the name of public morality. It is a feature of our national life and has made us world famous. I don't wish to stand in the way of these good citizens and their traditions. Their little plan will give pleasure to the many and pain to few, and the majority must rule."

The ultimate success of the play was due to the untiring efforts of Miss Lena May Williams, who, as coach, put the play into a class which easily could be considered above that of the usual amateur play. Every member of the Senior Class of 1921 feels indebted to Miss Williams for her splendid idea which gave them the opportunity to show their love and loyalty to Central High School by bringing the Class Play to our Auditorium.

Road Show
THE Seventh Annual Road Show, presented in the High School Auditorium on the after-oons and evenings of April 15th and 16th, was one of the best ever produced. The program was well-balanced, consisting of a wide variety of acts and arranged to appeal to the different tastes.

The usual opening military act, given by the non-commissioned officers under the direction of Major Clarke Morris, was extraordinarily well presented and very interesting.

The Razzel-Dazzel Octette, made up of Eloise Searle and seven boys, directed by Mr.
Francis Potter, and accompanied by Margaret Widenor, charmed the audiences with an artistic and melodious performance.

Harold Jacobs, Wallace Marrow, and John Madgett presented an acrobatic stunt so nearly professional that the entire high school was astonished to find that it possessed such finished performers.

The boys’ Glee Club, directed by Mrs. Pitts, followed the tumblers with two humorous selections, of that fine quality which we have learned to expect from the Glee Club this year.

“"The Master Trick” — the scene shifters act — was cleverly done, giving the audience the desired shock, and leaving the freshmen consumed with curiosity to know “What happened next!”
Central was glad of the chance to see the group of boys who, without thought of personal glory, have worked so faithfully this year to make our dramatic productions successful.

The next act was “The Confessional,” a one act play by Percival Wilde, which was directed by Miss Lena May Williams. The various roles were taken by Mary Drake, George Benolken, Leon Connell, and Almeda Hamilton, all of whom showed marked dramatic ability. “The Confessional” is a strong play and it required strong support from all of the actors to carry it through successfully. This play is a pioneer in the sadly neglected field of dramatics. It marks a new epoch in the development, understanding, and appreciation of the finer arts, and we hope that in the future we shall see many more productions of this kind.

The Road Show Saxtette, with “Stew” Edgerly, Jack DeLong, William Drake, Charles Holdrege, Harold Jacobs and “Sco” DeLong, gave us one of the best exhibitions of jazz we have ever seen. Big saxophones and little saxophones joined in making jazz such as our auditorium has never before witnessed, and the performers had difficulty in escaping their enthusiastic audiences.

“The Red Lamp” a clever comedy, under the direction of Miss Maybel Burns, closed a most satisfactory Road Show in a most satisfactory way. Miriam Wiley, Thelma Burke, and Cortes Kelly carried the leading roles, with able support from Marian Alleman, Benjamin Mead, and Carleton Evans.

Financially, too, the Road Show was successful. Almost nineteen hundred dollars was cleared. The school wishes to thank the C. O. C., the ticket sellers, the cast, and the faculty, who gave so freely of their time and talents in making the Road Show a success.

The success of the Road Show was due largely to the experienced direction of Mr. Gulgard, our Commandant. The cadets in their presentation would have worked under a great disadvantage without his generous co-operation.

The cadet management itself must be given due credit for the successful manner in which they carried out their respective assignments. We credit George Benolken and his co-workers with the fact that the auditorium was packed at all performances.

Carle Dimond handled the programs in a very creditable manner. Frank Freeman, business manager of programs, made the advertising a source of profit. Russell Countryman, our art editor, gave us one of the neatest looking programs yet produced. All shows need publicity to get across and we are indebted to Harry Haynes for some first class work in this line. Mr. Bexten and his stage crew could match most favorably with a professional bunch of scene shifters.
George Smith, assisted by Miss Parker, made the properties a credit to the show. The orchestra in charge of Edward Vlach and directed by Murrel Simpson showed not only talent but ability to meet the occasion. The way in which Crawford Pollmer’s ushers handled the audience was another feature which helped to put the show across.

It was through this hearty co-operation and willingness that the C. O. C. was able to make the Road Show the success that it was.

MAURINE RICHARDSON ’21
Music

This year the music department of the Central High School has been revolutionized. Mrs. Pitts has taken the old department of music and has developed three separate choruses.

Mrs. Pitts' motto was "Get down to business", and a very business-like voice test, at the beginning of the year, sent the "hangers-on" scattering. These few who were left settled down to work to win a reputation for this department of the school. The first visible result of their endeavor was the presentation of the musical number, "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast." Since then they have taken part in many community-center programs and have sung for the State Teachers' Association. In every case the choruses have raised the public's opinion of this High School's standard of music. Scarcely a mass meeting has gone by that did not have somewhere on its program a little music, for no small part of the plan which Mrs. Pitts has been striving to work out has been the development of a taste for better music among High School students.

This year the music department and the dramatic classes together gave the comic opera, the "Captain of Plymouth."

But with all, Mrs. Pitts believes that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, and Jill a sleepy girl," and so very few of the Glee Club members have ever been dull for want of fun.

Student Control

WEN A NEED is felt, a remedy can usually be supplied. A new solution was needed for the problem of hall and lunch room supervision. Certain conditions existed which were more or less detrimental. An experiment was made in lunch room supervision by utilizing the services of two or three boys. The outcome of the experiment led to so much favorable comment that it was determined to expand the idea. As a result the "Student Control" or "S. C." was organized. At the present time this organization is composed of thirty seniors and ten juniors, evenly divided among boys and girls. The group has grown slowly as individual interest and initiative made various ones eligible. Although the pledge each must sign, before receiving the "S. C." badge is very strict, so far only one has hesitated to accept the responsibility. Of those who have signed nearly all have conducted themselves in such a manner as to reflect credit upon the organization. This should not be surprising, however, as quality was considered of more value than quantity; that is, the work of a few of exceptional merit would have more far-reaching effects than poorer work turned out in greater volume. There is no limit to the membership. The ideal condition would be for all of the senior class to realize their responsibilities and actively assume them. The seniors represent practically the finished products of this great institution, and as such should be fitted to assume authority. By displaying their self-control they should be entitled to try their ability in controlling others. This would lead to a utopian condition in which teachers could exert all their energies in teaching and the seniors by example and precept would teach the younger students the rules and traditions of the school so that the breaker of rules and the despoiler of traditions would be an object of scorn and derision, a traitor to his classmates and his school.

There has been an attempt made to discredit members of the organization by libelous propaganda, as if they were tale-bearers and sneaks. The personnel of the organization is the best refutation of such attacks, which, it is needless to state, are baseless. The class leaders realize that school rules operate to the advantage of the student body as a whole and they gladly associate themselves with a movement for greater democracy, for a closer relationship between governed and governing bodies. The success of the "Student Control" means school success, because it means the students, as a result of the lessons learned, are able to assume a place in society which tips the balance of civilization toward advancement and better government with greater individual freedom.

Societies

As we approach the last days of our high school career, as the thought comes to us that we never again may consider ourselves pupils of Central, we begin to look back and see what we have really gained from our four years of labor. To be sure, the first things that come to our minds are examinations, tests, flunk notices, and report cards, because, of course, we have studied some. Then, we think of our friends; first, of the tried and true ones, who have shared all our trials, troubles, and eighth hours with us in the spirit of true comradeship. There are a thousand and one things that come to our minds next, among others the frolics and good times we have had in the societies we have belonged to. Don’t they bring us pleasant memories? Doesn’t it make us feel proud to see the glorious record of our societies?

The Gym Club reminds us of the exhibitions we have seen. Just think how much work the girls have willingly put on those exhibitions every year. We showed our appreciation, though, by supporting the first camp as we did, last year. Gym Club does a great deal toward making this camp possible and we all know that camp is almost a necessity as well as a joy and pleasure. Gym Club holds scholarship as one of its highest ideals, a fact which makes us think even more of it as an organization.

Then there are the Debating Societies. We all remember the snappy programs put on by the L. D. S. and the W. D. S. Each society had its representatives in the inter-class debates and thus helped to support our school activities. In Purple and White Week, both clubs did their share in making the movement a success.

The Hawthorne girls have been active during the past year. In addition to carrying on their literary work, which, of course, holds first place, they have had many parties and good times together.

The girls of the Lininger Travel Club have enjoyed many interesting times together this year. We all know what a privilege it is to hear our own teachers tell of their experiences in other lands. Such talks as these have been rendered as programs in this society. Service stands high with these girls, who have given entertainments at the Old Peoples’ Home for those less fortunate than themselves. Purple and White Week is a never-to-be-forgotten activity. We must give the Student Club a good portion of the credit for the organization of this glorious plan for arousing school spirit. Purple and White Week is just one of the club’s many activities. There is a play given every year and we all know what a “Student Club Play” means. Then every summer there is camp at Brewster. Any girl can tell us that to go once is to go again. Last fall, many a freshman, disappointed room-hunter that he was, was turned around and set on the right track by some girl who wore “Ask Me” on her arm. Student Club’s ideals are of the highest, for what girl could not find her place in a club which upholds “scholarship, friendship, service, health and democracy?”

We are proud of our societies, aren’t we?

Purple and White! The school colors! There are none more inspiring in the whole color catalogue. How many pictures the three words bring to us! And surely among these not a single student of 1920-1921 will find missing those of Purple and White Week. During this week the whole school united in the attempt to put in more concrete form than the divided activities of the every-day school life made possible, the spirit of unity and of loyalty which Purple and White demand.

What are some of the pictures that the words Purple and White Week may conjure up? The executive committee may see its eight students and four faculty members in heated discussion during one of the earlier meetings; or, later, searching some spot on which to carry on its discussion, all the regular meeting places being occupied by the committees it had created. Or it may see its sub-committees in groups of two or three in consultation over the general management, the class days, or Purple and White Day.

The class officers may see meetings with the contest chairman, when they must rejoice with the one whose committee is at work heart and soul, or must encourage and spur on the one who has found that the talent of the class is largely along other lines than the one his committee is furtheing.

Surely the contest chairmen see themselves going through the activities cards, anxious to give each member of the class a chance to do his part in winning the class honors, or writing innumerable notes and delivering them to first hour rooms, or getting really acquainted with his teacher-sponsor, who, he finds, is not limited in interest to mathematics or Latin or History, but can give him real aid in interior decorating, or dramatics, or orchestra direction.

Then the statistics committee see a group, under the direction of Thomas McCague and Ruth Sunderland, dividing activities cards into as many piles as there are vacant desks in 149, perhaps, trying to locate a contest chairman, who will hand over a list of those who served on his committee, to be added to the list compiled of all taking part actively in the events of the week.

The finance committee, headed by Daisy Rich and Morse Troxell, see a room strewn with scissors and paste and bits of colored ribbons and purple and white felt. The occupants of this room are cutting out tiny O's of white to paste on tiny triangles of purple. And with this picture goes a special feeling of satisfaction that in spite of increased cost of materials and increased running expenses, the finance report shows a surplus.

And all, students and faculty, see the halls transformed by streamers and posters and feel the thrill of meeting Purple and White at every entrance. Or they see the auditorium, filled to its greatest capacity, yet attentively quiet to catch each word and mark each picture of the pageant which tells of Central's inspiring past. This is the most meaningful picture of all. It is the one that Purple and White Week this year has tried to make most vivid. We feel how splendid it is to belong to a school with traditions. We realize that though the outside may be made ugly for a time, the real Central is "set upon a hill" which will last as long as the, members of Central uphold the ideals established by the class of Seventy-six and maintained by succeeding classes for half a century.

Mary A. Parker.

THE SECOND FOOTBALL TEAM
Part Three

Central of the Future
Central of the Future

THE ALUMNUS—the man of distinguished and prosperous appearance who had been one of the little group that had met some days before—fingered the Annual of '21 almost tenderly. He had read it from cover to cover; it had pleased him; and in his enthusiasm, he could not keep his thoughts to himself—that is why his friend, the Student, was with him now.

They were alone, these two, in the older man's library and study, a magnificent, well-stocked library, which somehow gave one the impression of quietness and dignity, of culture, and of friendliness—an ideal place for a heart-to-heart talk.

The older man was wrapped in his own thoughts. The Student broke the silence.

"You like it, Sir? It is worth while? We have tried to carry on as you did. Have we a record to be proud of? Have we upheld honorably the noble traditions of the school? I can say in all truth we have done our best."

"Yes," came the rich, deep-toned reply, "Yes, you have carried on. And I can answer in all truth that you have a record to be proud of; a record that is truly in keeping with the high traditions of our Alma Mater."

"And those who remain," went on the Student enthusiastically, "those whom we leave behind, shall too carry on! To them we leave the responsibility of upholding these traditions! They are the builders of progress within the school, now! And they will go forward, aye, even further than we, toward the greater Light—a greater, better, nobler Centra High!"

The Alumnus smiled a tolerant, somewhat wistful smile at this youthful demonstration of spirited enthusiasm. He was, you see, more advanced in years, and had seen so much more of life than his young friend, and knew, perhaps, that enthusiasm may be carried too far.

"Yes, young friend," he answered quietly, "let us hope they will. But they must not forget to guard against the folly of extremes. A greater Central High, yes—but greatness can make us contemptuous and unkind. A better and nobler Central High too—but goodness can degenerate into bigotry. A freer Central High—but freedom may sink to intolerance, and even to outlawry. A school of great learning—but learning can descend to mere pedantry. Let them watch against these enemies of true greatness, keeping in mind the words of the poet Tennyson,

"Turning to scorn with lips divine
The falsehood of extremes."

The Student had caught the spirit of the older man, the true spirit of life—the spirit of tolerance, of humility, of kindness. He was beginning to see the splendid truth of it all, through the eyes of his older friend.

"And so," he began, and the eyes of the two met, "it follows that there must be a greater co-operation, a greater kindness, a greater willingness to help, to sacrifice?"

"Yes," the Alumnus spoke softly, "A greater co-operation, a greater kindness." And then, with that same wistful smile: "You see, young pal, the world is still a frightfully self-centered old world, as are all its people. Wouldn't it be a really beautiful place if everyone were willing to help, to sacrifice for everyone else? No, I am not pleading for a Utopia. That, I am afraid, is very, very far distant. But we can do folks a good turn when it is within our power. And I'm not saying that we don't, even now. But we could do it more often."

"But—but," interrupted the Student, rather lamely, "we do, you know, in Central High——"

"Yes," the Alumnus went on, "everyone does,—but to what extent? We are all kindly disposed, more or less. But do we really help, and sacrifice?"
If it seriously interfered with our own pleasure, with our own amusements and desires, with our own selfish ends, would we still be willing to give—of our time and energy and worldly goods? Are teachers and students doing their best to cooperate? Yes, your teachers are giving of their time and energy to aid the students. And there is the new Parent-Teachers' Association, for the frank and open discussion of student work and aims, a wonderful work, provided it is not carried too far. Restrictions are necessary, and it is the duty of the parents and teachers to regulate to a certain extent the lives of those students who are still too young to take that responsibility upon themselves. But heed must be paid to what constitutes wise restriction."

"And," added the Student, musingly, "it is plain that the whole thing will never amount to much unless the students, too, heartily co-operate; unless they too, have higher aims."

"Precisely," continued the Alumnus, "teachers and pupils must be more kindly disposed towards each other. There must be a greater camaraderie between the two. The desire to help, the spirit of sacrifice, must guide the lives of each. And then—we will have the solid foundation for a greater Central High."

"Dissension—dissension, and a cold indifference to others—" philosophized the Student, after the manner of youth—"gets one nowhere. And although our record is clean and honorable, Dissension still stalks throughout Central High, among the student body. Its parents are Jealousy and Narrow-mindedness, and it is only too evident in the various phases of school affairs. All the greater honor to those who have tried to combat it, standing as they have against overwhelming odds, and shouldering blame where blame was only too often not theirs."

"Very true," approved the Alumnus, "it is the enemy which the student body must fight and crush. The seeds of union and friendship can not bear fruit if sown alongside the seeds of dissension and turmoil. It is easy, but ignoble, for man to destroy; it is more difficult, but finer and nobler, for him to build up. People must be inspired with high ideals before they can rise to the heights!"

"But surely," interposed the younger man, "the ideals of Central are of the highest! Surely we could wish for none better!"

"Lad," the Alumnus pointed out, "the ideals are of the finest, but more might be done toward the attainment of these ideals. With dissension in the midst, they still remain, for the most part, in the realm of the Unattainable. Your class has striven nobly towards the realization of these ideals, and the underclassmen are carrying on the great work—but there still remains much to be done. Remember, I am not criticizing. I am a graduate of Central High School, and it would be one of the greatest joys of my life to see in fact the School of my Dreams. For Central High—the best, the best only, and nothing but the best!"

The Student, attentive to the older man's words, repeated the toast almost mechanically. The Alumnus went on:

"And the greatest of these ideals—a truer democracy! a willingness to get together, to work together, to sacrifice together, towards the realization of that Greater Central High! Sectionalism, jealousy, petty quarreling, and snobbery are poor, contemptible substitutes for friendliness, good-will, and the democratic spirit. The quickest and surest, and perhaps the only way for an institution to become great is through co-operation.

"The second of our ideals—a greater loyalty to the institution; loyalty and obedience to the authority of its administrations. One does not forfeit one's self-respect and dignity by such obedience. One of the fundamental principles of a democracy is respect for, and obedience to constituted authority.

"A third, and most important ideal—for it is the Ideal of Culture, is a greater appreciation among the students of the arts and Literature.

"But," broke in the Student, "we do have lots of that sort of thing, at Central, you know! The different arts, I mean; and we read the best literature!"

"Certainly," the Alumnus continued quietly, "but the literature is part of the required course; and the arts—well, I wonder how many truly appreciate them? True, there are those at Central who are carrying on the noblest work it is given to men and women to do, working patiently and untiringly to fan to life the ethereal flame that burns in the soul of every human being, the true love and appreciation of the Beautiful; of the Arts—of Music, Dramatics, Oratory; of Literature, the songs of the poets, the unsurpassable works of the prose-writers! Wonderful work! And the infinite pity of it all is that in the many that dormant flame is never aroused. How much more life would mean to them if it were aroused! That is the greatest tragedy of all; they go through life, and—never understand."

"And painting and sculpture—what of those lovely paintings that hang on the walls of every room in Central; those magnificent statues at different spots throughout the School? Do the majority appreciate them, too? They are not just a means of decorating the bare walls, and filling in the vacant places in the building—they are masterpieces of art!

"And that, young friend," concluded the Alumnus, "is one of my greatest dreams for the Central of the Future—an intense interest, and love, and appreciation in the heart and soul of every student, for all these things. It will make better men and women of them; it will make us a better nation; it will, ultimately, let us hope, make a better world."

The Student's eyes were fixed on the features of the speaker with the admiration of youth; the words had impressed him. Both were silent for a few moments; then the younger man spoke:

"The honor of the School has been upheld, too, in the field of Athletics. It is true, sir, we lost a good many games, but the School's reputation for sportsmanship and fair play was never once disgraced. After all, honorable defeat, after a hard-fought game, is the greater victory. I dream of the time when Central's teams will be second to none; when, by sheer grit and that same sportsmanship and fair play, they will reach the topmost rung in the ladder of Athletics."

"That is my hope, too," agreed the Alumnus, "and besides, physical prowess in some one line is both admirable and desirable, from every standpoint. All success, too, to the Girl's Athletics! Athletic women, as well as athletic men, is a grand ideal. The greatness of the race depends largely on our physical superiority."

"The regiment, too," added the Student, "is doing great work along these lines."

"Yes, it is helping to build the boys up physically, besides teaching them to be alert, prompt, and obedient. Here's to an even greater regiment in the future, the pride of the School and of the City!"

They talked, all heedless of the time, of many things—of the various school activities, of the students, of the Annual which was lying at hand.

A clock chimed. The Student glanced towards it, and was startled at the lateness of the hour. He rose reluctantly, and turned to his smiling host.

"I didn't know it was so late. The time has certainly flown. But I have enjoyed the evening so much—why, I—I'm rather sorry I must go——."

The Alumnus laughed gladly—a boyish laugh.

"No more than I, young friend. It has been a wonderful evening for me, too; and perhaps it was all very much worth while—our dreams!"

"Believe me, sir, it has been worth while—to me, the Student assured him gravely.

"Then here's to Central High! To all that she has been in the past, to what she is now, to all that she will be in the glorious future! For Central—the best, the best only, and nothing but the best."

And both joined in the short toast, but the few words came straight from the heart:

"To the Central of the Future!"

SEPTEMBER 7.
Gee, this is sure a swell diary my aunt gave me for graduation. I used to think only a sissy would keep a diary but I think I'll start one myself. Gosh, but Central High School is some large place; but I'm pretty smart if I say so myself—I only got lost once. Everybody seemed to be in a hurry today and nobody seemed to know where they were going. It's a great life this being a high school man. Guess I'll go and visit grade school next week.

SEPTEMBER 8–30.
Nothing exciting has been happening. I've gone to some good football games though. I guess I'll be on the football team in a couple of years.

OCTOBER 1.
Today there was an election at school for the Register. Some excitement! Believe me, I guess I'll run for editor when I'm a senior. If I do say so myself, I think I'd be pretty good.

OCTOBER 25.
Mid-term exams start today. I can't see any reason for examinations, and believe me I have all the students in back of me. A banking system has been started up here. Idea sounds right to me. I opened up an account. It's nice for a man to carry around a bank-book I think.

OCTOBER 29.
Well the presidential election is over as far as Central High is concerned. We elected him today by a straw vote. Gee, I knew all the time that he would get elected. If I say so myself, I'm pretty keen sometimes.

OCTOBER 30.
Went to a football game today. Central vs. Beatrice. Good game all except the final score but our fellows deserve credit just the same.

NOVEMBER 2.
Junior-Senior Day! I can't say much for that because they wouldn't let me in the auditorium.

NOVEMBER 3.
Purple and White Week started today. I think it's great stuff. Today is freshman-sophomore day. I'm in the freshmen dramatics and if I say so myself, I'm pretty good. After school, I went up to Dr. Senter's room to see the Register exhibit. I've decided on the kind of cards I think I'll use when I run for editor.

This is Purple and White Day and believe me it's great. Why I almost felt as if I really was an indispensable member of the school until a great big tall stiff with glasses came up to me and said "Is there anything I can do for you, little boy?" Little boy! Can you imagine that? And me in long pants. Believe me I hate seniors almost as badly as I do sophomores.

December 14.
Today I walked past the bulletin board in the east hall and there was a bunch of big tall senior fellows reading something. All the senior girls were in the back trying to get a look, but they didn't stand a show. Anyway I found out later it was the senior list. I guess the girls found out sooner or later. They aren't so busy as we men. Any way they can wait.

December 16.
The Captain of Plymouth was given today. Very good. I thought and so did everyone else.

December 17.
Oh, Boy! Christmas vacation.

January 1.
Happy New Year—Friends and Teachers.

January 3.
Today there was a mass meeting and some ladies came and gave Elizabeth Patton and J. M. Watt some prizes for writing poetry. I wonder if I could write poetry. Guess I'll try some time. The sun was sinking in the west My pa spilled gravy on his best vest (Gosh this would be swell for the Register) But when I laughed and said Ho! Ho! I left that room darn fast Yea! Bo!

Pretty good "Nest-pa."

January 27.
I saw the senior class play, Mr. Bob, tonight. Very good, I think. I wonder if Bluebeard's wife was named after Fatima cigarettes.

January 29.
Got my cards today; one, B, one C, and two C—Boy but it was a grand and glorious feeling. Didn't flunk in a thing. Pretty good I'll say.

February 22.
It doesn't pay to lie. Honesty is the best policy. Today was George Washington's birthday and we didn't have school.

February 28.
Americanization Week. There was a mighty fine program in the auditorium today after school. My, but it's nice to be an American.

March 25.
Tonight the Student Club gave The Bewilder- ing Miss Felicia. I wasn't going at first, but the keenest looking girl with bobbed hair was selling tickets and I went all right, all right. And I wasn't sorry either.

School started today. Everybody and myself had the spring fever. The circular today said that whistling in the halls must be stopped. I guess they are afraid we might wake up some of the people in the study halls. Pretty considerate I'll say. Anyway, I'm tired of Margie and that is all you hear!

April 12.

More report cards today! I got three C's and one B—. Pretty good I think. There is a lost and found sale being conducted in the office. Guess I'll go down and buy back some of my stuff. My mother wants her umbrella. Wonder how much they'll charge me for it.

April 13.

You know there is a new organization being started here. The "S.C.'s" I couldn't imagine what "S. C.'s" meant so I asked some big fellow and he gave me a pitiful glance and said, "Why its to protect the freshman. "S. C." means "Save the Children." Well can you imagine that?

April 14.

I found out today what S. C. really means. Well I think the Student Control is going to be fine. Gee, won't that big senior fellow feel silly when he finds out that S. C. doesn't mean "Save the Children." I'll have a good laugh on him all right, all right.

May 6.

Central won the city track meet today. Oh boy! It was only by one point but what's the difference, just so we won?

May 10.

There was a gym exhibit at school today. Well I've never seen a gym exhibit but I heard that the same little blonde girl with bobbed hair that sold me the tickets to the student club play was going to be in the exhibit; so I went all right, all right and I think it was great. Especially the drill—she was in that.

How to Secure a Good Position

During the war it was easy for young men or women to find employment; as a matter of fact, employment found them. Many without any previous experience whatever got positions paying $20, $25, and even $30 a week.

But that was only a temporary condition. Times have changed.

Lady Washington Vellum

In Wedding Announcements, paper dominates printing, because the printed message is so brief and conventional that paper is called upon to give it elegance.

The exceptional beauty of Lady Washington Wedding Stationery is at once apparent, the colonial vellum texture, beautiful clear color, the correct sizes of the invitation and announcement sheets and reception cards, both plain and paneled all breathe of Milady’s charm and express the good taste and courtesy of the user.

Sold through engraving and printing stationers. Samples sent on request.

Class of 1921

BY ELIZABETH PATTON

To the tune of America The Beautiful

With hearts exulting and with joy,
Our voices rise in song,
And hopes and smiles and comradeship
Will bear the sound along.
Oh, twenty-one; oh, twenty-one,
Glad class of twenty-one,
All down the years thy fame extend
Wherever shines the sun.

A host of memories and friends,
Equipped our race to run,
We set our faces stedfastly
Toward mighty deeds begun.
Oh, twenty-one; oh, twenty-one,
Four years of work and fun.
And now we go from Central High
In nineteen-twenty-one.

Our loyalty will never fail
Nor pride and love grow dim,
But now and evermore our hearts
With happiness shall brim.
Oh, twenty-one, oh, twenty-one,
Glad class of twenty-one.
The skies shall echo back again
"Hurrah for twenty-one!"

To tune of Maryland, My Maryland

We'll give a shout, we'll give a cheer,
Class of nineteen-twenty-one.
We'll send the echoes far and near,
Class of nineteen-twenty-one.
Of joy and hope we loudly sing,
The stirring sound will gladly ring.
Our loyalty and faith we bring
The class of nineteen-twenty-one.
